The most successful people on earth possess the ability to suspend disbelief. What I mean by "suspend disbelief" is to overlook the reasons of why something can't work, and start thinking about the reasons why it will work.

That, Not This

By Rebecca Fine

A friend recently sent me an email that contained one simple sentence that jumped right off the screen and hit me in the face.

When I wrote back to thank her, she was surprised because she hadn't thought of it as anything particularly profound — just something she'd been thinking about, had maybe heard somewhere else, "just a thought" she barely remembered writing down.

Here's what she wrote:

"If you think you have to get THIS in order to have THAT, then what you REALLY want is THAT, not THIS."

OK, maybe it is really simple, but the most profound statements usually are. So read that again and think about it for a moment, please, then let me flesh it out a bit in light of what I hear so often from readers and students of The Science of Getting Rich.

Here's a sample of what new (and not-so-new) SOGR readers frequently express as their "clear mental images" of what they desire to impress on the Formless:

- "A million dollars in the bank."
- "A new job that pays $100,000 a year or more."
- "An advanced degree in _____."

Now, as the saying goes, "There's nothing wrong" with any of those desires. And yet, when I probe a bit further and ask, "WHY do you want that million dollars?" I usually get an answer back that goes something like this:

"So I can buy a new home for my family, pay for my kids' education, and ..."

The same kinds of reasons often turn up for wanting that new job.

And the reason for wanting more education is usually to get a better job to get more money to get ... well, I think you're probably starting to catch on to the theme here, right?

Accept New Challenges --- Dare to Be Different -- Dream -- Laugh alot, above all, smile at life

So let's plug any of those into what my friend wrote:

"If you think you have to get a million dollars in order to have a new home, then what you really want is a new home, not a million dollars."

Yup, it's simple. And profound when you go more deeply into it.

You know how you can often save a lot of money on a purchase if you're able to go right to the source — get it wholesale or better instead of paying the marked-up retail price? Well, the same thing applies when you're "placing your order" with the Cosmic Supplier (the Formless, the Supreme Mind, the Universe).

In other words, cut out the middle-man!

Why waste time, energy, and effort clarifying a mental image of something that's not REALLY what you truly desire? Why not go right for the real thing instead?

After all, money itself has no value of its own, and the value we assign it today can change in a heartbeat. Back in 1929 there were plenty of people here in the United States who thought their security lay in the vast amounts of money they controlled.

But on October 29, when the stock market crashed and their money vanished overnight, they were throwing themselves out skyscraper windows.

Who needs THAT kind of "security?"

You may THINK you want money — a LOT of money, even a particular and very large amount of money. And you may very well end up getting it.

But when you focus on money rather than on what you TRULY desire to be, do, or have, what you're really doing is getting caught up in the HOW rather than the WHAT of your true heart's desires.

My friend, you have to let go of the "how." If you don't, you're handcuffing the Universe and telling it, no thanks, don't bring me my heart's desires THAT way. The more tightly you try to hold onto the how, onto figuring out how everything has to happen and how you can make it happen that way, the more you slow down the process of manifestation.

What are your real, innermost, perhaps long-deferred dreams?

If you think you don't know, please realize that you DO. They may be deeply buried, but the dreams are still within you. Those dreams are, as Mr. Wattles puts it, "life seeking expression," just as in the little boy he watched trying to bring music out of a piano. Remember?

Sometimes, people even come up with an amount of money as their "dream," to AVOID having to go within and see what they find there. But as author Neale Donald Walsch has noted in a neat play on words, if you fail to go within, you will go without.

If you've been unconsciously substituting some amount of money for your true desires, then you're trying to take a shortcut that can't lead where you want to go.

Here's the thing: When you get absolutely clear on your true desires, you will know it at a very deep level. You'll FEEL it with an odd mixture of enthusiasm and peaceful calm. It'll just feel right — because it is.

Accept New Challenges --- Dare to Be Different -- Dream -- Laugh alot, above all, smile at life

When you feel that way, your "mental image" will be powerfully impressed on the Formless.

And when you go right for the REAL dream instead of all that you THINK you need to have in order to get that real dream, you are throwing open all the doors and windows and secret passageways for your good to come to you. You are getting yourself, your old ideas, and other unnecessary limitations out of the way so that you can receive, recognize, and ACCEPT the fulfillment of your desire as it appears.

Here's a delightful example from Practical GeniusesTM course member JAIN BRAND in Sydney, Australia:

"I have been studying The Science of Getting Rich for a few months now and have had lots of nice little surprises. But I got a big one a few weeks ago which taught me a lot.

"I am a mad keen horse person and one of my dreams was to own a horse for trail riding. I originally thought about just getting a basic, cheap, scrubby little horse but then realised I might as well ask for the whole dream.

"I began to think, instead, of riding a beautiful, tall, well trained horse. I would picture myself on this horse several times a day. I would walk along the trails that I would like to ride the horse. I visited saddleries and looked at gear that I would like to buy for my new horse.

"And then it happened.

"I was offered a beautiful, tall, well trained horse. He is worth a lot more than I could possibly pay for him. He has a small injury that would prevent him from competing at top level, but won't in any way affect his trail riding ability and the owners just wanted him to go to a good home.

"Anyway, I waffle on, but the point to this story is that I went into a mild panic when I was offered this magnificent horse. Where could I keep him, how would I look after him, how could I afford to keep him??? Because I had to make a decision about whether I wanted him in just a few hours I nearly said no.

"But then I thought this is what I've asked for, here it is and I have to accept this gift.

"And it all worked out perfectly. I found a really good place to keep him and he's turned out to be very cheap to look after. To think ...

"I nearly missed out on this wonderful horse because I wasn't ready for when it happened.

"Now when good things are offered to me, I accept them immediately and know that the 'hows and whys' will work themselves out.

"Needless to say, every time I ride my beautiful horse I am extremely grateful!!

See how it works? Instead of thinking, well, I need X amount of money to buy a horse, Jain skipped over that and went right for "the whole dream," getting VERY clear on that image: imagining riding the horse, visiting saddleries, walking the trails, and so on.

And notice how neatly all the other bits and pieces necessary to the "big picture" have worked themselves out, too: Where money itself was needed, there was money enough.

Odd as it may seem, by not focusing on money or the other means by which your dream may be fulfilled, money itself may very well show up — and often in amazing ways and bigger amounts than you imagined. The thing to remember is simply that how your dream is delivered is not up to you!

Wallace Wattles writes: "It is not your part to guide or supervise the creative process. All you have to do with that is to retain your vision, stick to your purpose, and maintain your faith and gratitude."

Realize, too, my friend, that whatever it is you desire to be, do, or have, ultimately you are aiming for a feeling. In other words, you believe that achieving this desire will cause you to feel good in one way or another — perhaps happy, powerful, loved, competent, successful, and so on.

So look at what Mr. Wattles tells us about how THAT works:

"Think and speak of all the things you have asked for in terms of actual present ownership. Imagine an environment and a financial condition exactly as you want them, and live all the time in that mental environment and financial condition until they take physical shape.

"... In the mental realm, enter at once into full enjoyment of the things you want."

"... Be as thankful for it all the time as you expect to be when it has taken form."

You see, when we think the good feeling is the result of getting what we want, we've got the process exactly backwards!

Create the feeling first (as Jain did). That's what powers the impression of your clear mental image on the Formless and starts the process of bringing it into physical form.

Now some teachers and writers express this by saying that the key is for YOU to give first — and then the Universe will respond.

But really, when you consider that everything you already have — including your life and the very air you are breathing right this minute — is a gift, then you can see that it's not about you giving first. That's not even possible!

The key is understanding that the process often called manifestation (and that we call the science of getting rich) is an ongoing cycle of giving and receiving, of cause and effect, and that, as Mr. Wattles says, "Substance is friendly to you, and is more anxious to give you what you want than you are to get it."

If you're thinking you have to get this in order to be, do, or have that which you truly desire, it may be time to think again!

Management

James English, M.I.M., B.S.M.Eng., (Director of Research & Development)

James English has been working in the American automotive industry for over 35 years. He worked as a senior field Engineer for GM and has worked with just about every major Western Government with respect to their automotive programs.

He established the microwave system for the French Aerospace Agency with the U.S. government, which took him in front of Congress to promote what later became the On-Star program.

Jim sat on the Society of Automotive Engineers (SAE) Motor Vehicle Council with many CEOs of the major automotive companies. In 1992 the SAE asked Jim to develop an aftermarket division. He served as the Director of this division for two terms (a total of 6 years) and still plays an active role in guiding policy. The division and its committees developed the processes and procedures designed to ensure consumer safety and satisfaction within the massive industry that is the automotive aftermarket.

Jim has given considerable input to the ongoing development of Bi-Tron and remains committed to ensure that our products, present and future, remain at the forefront of all lubrication and fuel combustion technologies.

John Hunter has been appointed President of Bi-Tron Global Australia [Bi-Tron Global (Australia) Pty Ltd].

John has had almost 30 years of senior management experience in the Network Marketing industry. Starting in 1982 when, with two friends, he introduced Herbalife to Australia and New Zealand.

From 1983 – 1989, with his background in accounting, publishing and computers he helped to start a number of companies both in Australia and the USA.

In 1989, he was approached to establish Neways' (then Images & Attitude) operations in Australia. He was also responsible for New Zealand, the UK and Malaysia. In mid-1994 he was asked to become CEO of the world-wide operations and moved, with his family, to Utah. He resigned that position in early 1995 following a disagreement in management style with the then owners.

In 1995, he was appointed founding President of Vancouver-based N/A/T/O International. With the help of a great management team, they had successful operations in Canada, USA, Australia and Taiwan. Sales reached almost $50 million in the second year.

In early 2000, John and his family returned to live on the Gold Coast in Australia. From 2000 – 2006, John helped two more companies establish themselves.

At the end of 2006, he decided to retire from the industry.

He is very excited about this new opportunity, particularly in the light of current world events. He sees the Bi-Tron Global opportunity being able to help people adversely affected by the global downturn and the products making a difference to the environment by helping to reduce emissions.
